Called a post-modern Socrates, Kwame Anthony Appiah, author of The Honor Code: How Moral Revolutions Happen (2010), asks profound questions about identity and ethics in a world where the sands of race, ethnicity, religion and nationalism continue to realign and reform before our eyes. In recognition of the “urgent relevance” of Appiah’s recent work, the Division of the Humanities within the College of Arts and Sciences is pleased to announce Appiah’s The Honor Code as the centerpiece of the Common Text Symposium.

This event will highlight the best and brightest minds among the Humanities Division’s student population in the form of several student panels that will follow on the heels of the much-anticipated Keynote Address by Dr. Kwame Anthony Appiah.

Call For Papers

We invite submissions of complete papers from undergraduate and graduate students from Departments within the Division of the Humanities: Classics, English, Philosophy, and World Languages and Cultures.

Paper submissions must grapple with any aspect of topics that emerge from Appiah’s text. Papers that cross disciplines and historical periods are welcome. Interested students should discuss with their professors. Professors are encouraged to mentor students’ research, writing, and presentations.

Suggested Topics, a Study Guide and more details are available at www.coas.howard.edu/commontext

Submission Deadline Thursday, March 22, 2012

For more information, contact Dr. Sandra Shannon, Chair of the Division of the Humanities, at sshannon@howard.edu or 202-806-5443.

Sponsored by the Division of the Humanities College of Arts & Sciences