TEAM CAPTAIN

ARIEL CLARKE

To serve as team captain means to humbly accept the obligation of a change agent. In order to be effective and to implement changes, I have to be the bridge that connects the student body to faculty and staff. Through this position that I am grateful to have received, I intend to lead by listening more than I speak so that I ensure that students understand that they are seen and heard. Hearing the opinions of those around me and not taking their concerns, or ideas, big or small, for granted. Change agents are advocates who are progressive, innovative, and bold enough to demand change when necessary. I recognize that the task is not always easy but "to whom much is given, much is required." It is like Fredrick Douglas stated, "if there is no struggle there is no progress." This statement resonates with me because I understand what it is to face obstacles and struggles and truly believe that it is in the struggle and the adversity that character is built. My hope is that we will be able to make the most amount of change by impacting the present and future of our university
